ITU-R P.1664 system. This paper is the first of a series of papers describing an experimental system developed by an international team of investigators working with the ITU-R in the P.1664 study of noise exposure in digital TV receivers. P.1664 is a system that allows detailed measurement of the noise environment of a digital TV receiver and its immediate surroundings. While the current P.1664 system cannot be used to address the issue of ITU-R standardization of digital receivers, its capabilities and performance are important for understanding the nature of the analog TV receiver noise environment, and thus represent a critical step toward improving the situation by building a P.1664 system capable of dealing with those issues. The paper describes the structure of the P.1664 system, the measurement process and the key environmental factors involved, and presents some preliminary results of the system's performance. "We are fighting for our lives, and we want to live well." The need for understanding is really a vital component to our well-being in life. We understand why we're here, and why things happen. We understand why we make mistakes, and we understand why we make them, and why others do, too. In fact, when you really understand, you're more able to avoid making the same mistakes in the future. "You can learn to cook, but you cannot learn to cook to eat. You can learn to play chess, but you cannot learn to play chess to win. You can learn to work, but you cannot learn to work to earn money, and you cannot learn to work to earn money to live. You can learn to fight, but you cannot learn to fight to kill.” -Brenda Milanesi Yes, we’re fighting for our lives, and we want to live well. We all want to live well. We want to live a life of purpose. It’s because we want to live a life of purpose that we’ve chosen to learn how to play the piano. Why? Let’s talk about the difference between fighting for your life, and fighting for your life’s
